Dear Prime Minister Albanese

You're probably getting a bit cross with me. But to be honest, I'm like a wombat that won't give up. And respectfully, you've been ghosting me for over two weeks. And your mob in the Senate shut down Larissa Waters' attempt to get some commitment from the government about the climate crisis and what's necessary for a safe future.

I wanted to let you know that the wonderful people at Canberra Hospital who are looking after me have told me that today I will be allowed to go home if my blood test results come back positive.

PM Albo, I don't need to tell you much more than that because I know how the system works and all the public servants and your advisors will have been briefing you on what I've been up to. I used to write all those talking points and Question Time Briefs etc. You've probably also heard me or seen me in the media. Although you've been ghosting me, and may or may not agree with my demands for a safe planet, I'm sure you were impressed with me when I gave it back to Andrew Bolt. I don't tolerate discourtesy or bullying.

PM, I want you to know that when you get back to Canberra on 27 November, I'm gonna be waiting for you. I've got a petition with thousands of names on it. And I'd like to hand it to you personally. I look forward to meeting you then.

PM Albo, please show Australia you can be the PM we need you to be for a safe and prosperous future for our kids and country.

Respectfully and sincerely, Gregory

PS: I've attached a photo of my mum and I yarning over FaceTime while I've been in hospital. She's backed me 100% like your mum backed you.
